Kenyan Post-Electoral Violence (2007 - 2008)

The conflict emerged as post-election violence. After the incumbent President Kibaki was declared the winner of the Kenyan presidential elections in December 2007, complaints of fraud and a structural disadvantage affecting his competitor Raila Odinga lead to outbreaks of severe ethno-political violence. After the first incidents in the Rift Valley region, mainly directed against the Kikuyu ethnic group – the traditional powerbase of Kibaki – the fighting spread to the cities of Nairobi and Mombasa. After two months, Kibaki and Odinga agreed on a power-sharing agreement that granted Odinga the post as a Prime Minister and ended the violence.

Local agreement propertiesProcess type

Formal structured process

Rationale

Process supported by the National Cohesion and Integration Commission.

Is there a documented link to a national peace process?

No

Link to national process: articulated rationale Not explicitly stated in the agreement, although part of the National Cohesion and Integration Commission efforts to prevent future conflict address legacies of the post-election violence in 2008. However, the agreement itself relates to land rights and evictions, and the conflict between the Sabaot Land Defence Force (SLDF) and the Kenyan government.
